MONTREAL ELECTION '86

Dupas says Civic Party will rise again

By LEWIS MARRINQ of The Gazette

It was a purely formal gathering and there was no party at Montreal City hall.

But behind the facade, a new political movement was taking shape. This was the Municipal Committee of Montreal Civic Party (MCM), a party only three years old.

MCM leader Jeho Dupas gathered his supporters in the council chamber. Dupas, who was born in the city and has been active in politics for many years, was flanked by other members of the movement, including his brother, Jean Dupas.

"We have been fighting for a long time," Dupas told his supporters. "We have fought for our rights and we will not give up."

The crowd responded with cheers and applause. Dupas went on to outline his party's platform, which included proposals for more affordable housing, better public transportation, and greater representation for the city's residents.

"We believe in a strong, vibrant Montreal," Dupas said. "We believe in a city where everyone can live and work and thrive."

The gathering ended with a show of unity and determination. Dupas thanked his supporters for their support and promised to continue fighting for a better Montreal.

Christian Sauder,分享 war of politics

Career and private life first for Doré's wife

By MARIN SCOTT

Christian Sauder is a new father and he's making sure his family comes first.

"It's been a busy time," Sauder said. "But I want to make sure my family is happy and healthy."

Sauder is running for mayor of Montreal in the upcoming election. He's promising to make the city a more livable place.

"I want to make Montreal a city where people can thrive," Sauder said. "We need to make sure our streets are safe, our schools are strong, and our communities are welcoming."

Sauder is running as a member of the Montreal Movement Civic Party (MCM). He's received the support of Mayor Jean Dore, who has endorsed him.

"I'm proud to have the support of Mayor Dore," Sauder said. "He's done a lot for Montreal and I want to continue his work."

Sauder is facing challenges from other candidates, including Dupas, who is running as an independent.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," Sauder said. "I'm going to work hard and make sure Montreal is a city where everyone can succeed."

Chantal Sauder, with wife and civic party's George Savoiskvik watches the bad news.

Swamp Savoiskvik

By JULIA GREENS of The Gazette

"We are in a difficult situation," said Mayor Chantal Sauder. "I know it's not easy, but we have to keep moving forward."

Sauder is facing opposition from Dupas, who is running as an independent candidate.

"I'm going to fight for my community," Sauder said. "I want to make sure we have a strong, vibrant city."

Sauder is running as a member of the Montreal Movement Civic Party (MCM). She's received the support of Mayor Dore, who has endorsed her.

"I'm proud to have the support of Mayor Dore," Sauder said. "He's done a lot for Montreal and I want to continue his work."

Sauder is facing challenges from other candidates, including Dupas, who is running as an independent.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," Sauder said. "I'm going to work hard and make sure Montreal is a city where everyone can succeed."

Loyola race highlights N.D.G. sweep

By KAREN BERNARD

"We are going to win this race," said Mayor Chantal Sauder. "I know it's not easy, but we have to keep moving forward."

Sauder is facing opposition from Dupas, who is running as an independent candidate.

"I'm going to fight for my community," Sauder said. "I want to make sure we have a strong, vibrant city."

Sauder is running as a member of the Montreal Movement Civic Party (MCM). She's received the support of Mayor Dore, who has endorsed her.

"I'm proud to have the support of Mayor Dore," Sauder said. "He's done a lot for Montreal and I want to continue his work."

Sauder is facing challenges from other candidates, including Dupas, who is running as an independent.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," Sauder said. "I'm going to work hard and make sure Montreal is a city where everyone can succeed."

Rasoul is sole third-party winner

By JAMES MENNIE

"I am thrilled," said Mayor Chantal Sauder. "I know it's not easy, but we have to keep moving forward."

Sauder is facing opposition from Dupas, who is running as an independent candidate.

"I'm going to fight for my community," Sauder said. "I want to make sure we have a strong, vibrant city."

Sauder is running as a member of the Montreal Movement Civic Party (MCM). She's received the support of Mayor Dore, who has endorsed her.

"I'm proud to have the support of Mayor Dore," Sauder said. "He's done a lot for Montreal and I want to continue his work."

Sauder is facing challenges from other candidates, including Dupas, who is running as an independent.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," Sauder said. "I'm going to work hard and make sure Montreal is a city where everyone can succeed."

Michael Farber

It can be lonely outside city hall

The question after the campaign that routinely passes for election campaign coverage here is not whether mayor candidates win or lose, but how many votes. It's a point spread, but it's still a powerful question.

Dupas, who won the summer election in his engineered form of urbanism, said he'll continue to fight for his city. And as he steps back from the campaign, Dupas is determined to make his mark on the city.

Dupas dropped through the election process, but he'll have to find a way to build a new coalition in the city. Dupas plans to do it, but he'll have to fight hard for it. He's going to be a strong opponent.

No visible means of support

He has no seat on city council, which didn't have any seats on city council, and he's not in a position to build a new coalition. And for all his pre-election bravado, he will continue fighting, but he won't have the support of the city council, and he's been left to figure out how to build a new coalition without the support of the mayor. The city council is not on his side. And it's a long road ahead.

In a personal interview, he said he's going to continue fighting for the city, but he's going to have to build a new coalition. And it's going to be hard, but he's going to keep fighting.

"I have to build a new coalition," Dupas said. "It's not going to be easy, but I will continue fighting."